WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

 A Chance of Afternoon and Evening Thunderstorms Over the Northern and Eastern Mountains through Tuesday ***

 Southwest-West Gusts to 25-35 mph From the Cascade-Sierra Crest East Today ***

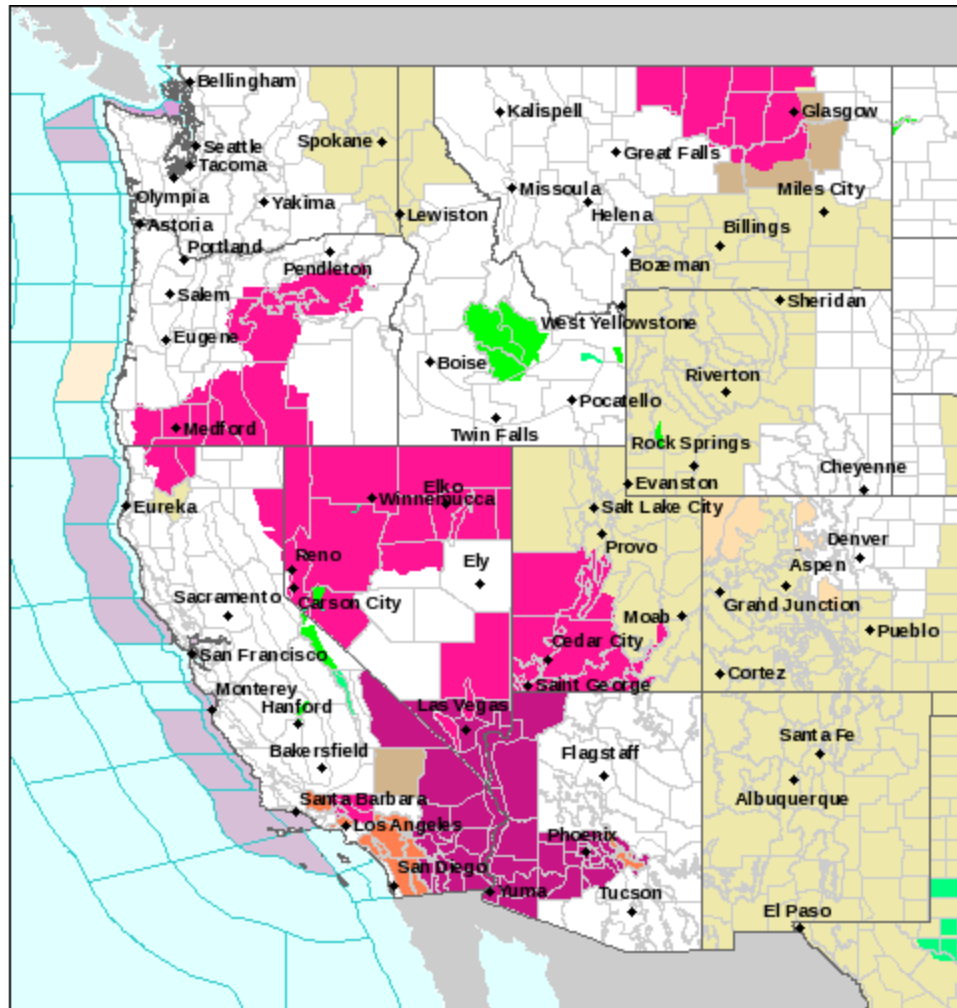

The strong high pressure that has been over the region has weakened and moved to the east today. A Pacific low pressure trough is approaching the coast. Today and tomorrow isolated afternoon thunderstorms are still possible in the northern and eastern mountains. Afternoon South-West winds will gust to 25 mph in many areas today, and 25-35 mph from the Cascade-Sierra crest east. The winds will be about 10 mph lighter tomorrow. Temperatures will be closer to normal today through Wednesday. High pressure will return with warmer temperatures Thursday through next weekend.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

Hot and dry today Cooling trend beginning Today ***

An area of low pressure off the Northern California coast will open up into a trough and will start to sag southward across the region in the coming week. This will bring cooler weather to the region along with increasing onshore flow and a deeper marine layer along the coast. High temperatures are expected to lower about 5 degrees each day starting today with the coolest weather expected to occur by mid-week. Night and morning low clouds and fog will increase in coverage and should spread into the coastal valleys by Wednesday. Westerly winds will increase across the mountains and deserts with breezy to locally windy conditions expected to develop each afternoon and evening through the desert passes starting today. After temperatures bottom out on Wednesday, a slight warming trend will begin, but temperatures should remain near normal over most of the area through next weekend.
